Issue 2014 - 7
July

Greetings VA-E family,

I hope everyone had a great time on 4th of July and also those attending Wing Ding! We have a few exciting activities in the planning stages. We are looking into holding a movie and bowling night. In a few weeks (information pending), Charlie and Ellen Smith are looking into leading a ride to a casino in North Carolina near the ending weeks of July. This will be an overnight over a week-end trip. Check your email for the dates.

I will be leading a two night (optional) stay ride to Waxhaw, NC., attending JAARS Day. We will spend a day at their headquarters touring their facilities and attending demonstrations! You will see how people get Internet in the rain-forest. If you wish, you can record your voice into the JESUS film. Details will be provided at the introduction. You'll get an up-close look at Bible translation, and why it relies on practical support like boats, 4WDs, and software. The day is totally flexible—so you can come and go as you like.

Event Details - Sat, 08/09/2014 - 9:00am to 4:00pm. COST: Admission is Free! Plane Ride $20, Helicopter Ride $22, and Four-Wheel-Drive Ride $5 and Lunch $6. Visit their website at <https://www.jaars.org/events/jaars-day> for more information.

Lodging is on a first come basis so I will need a commitment by July 28th. Email me at seadoggw@att.net.

We will hold our annual picnic for Chapter E's participants on September 21st, at Lee Hill Community Center. The catered lunch is free to all Chapter E participants (and listed family members) in good standing. It will be catered again by Tarheel Pig Pickers. If you came last year, you know why we asked them back!!! YUM!!! Check your email requesting an attendance count in the near future.

Mark your calendars for the ALL CHAPTER'S PICNIC on August 23rd in Colonial Heights, VA.

Finally, I'd like to share a little funny I got from a friend that rides a Harley and is an engineer. No offense to our Harley friends...but no Goldwinger works this way!!

Swerving

My ability to swerve at a moment's notice is and always has been lousy. Of course, you only get a moment's notice to swerve when one is needed. Poor swerving skills translate to increased risk on the highway. I might hope I am always looking far enough ahead, keeping good separation distanced from other cars, etc. to never need to swerve "for real" but I can't guarantee that. What if I almost swerved skillfully enough to miss that deer? I need to develop better swerve skills.

So, this month I present Swerves 101; the basics. My apologies to you if your swerves are already perfect and you were hoping for something with a little more application to your riding.

I have a sentence or two on each on these thoughts:

- 1) Look where you want to go
- 2) No braking until the swerve is complete
- 3) The bike leans, you don't
- 4) Countersteer
- 5) It takes practice

Target fixation is something we've all heard about and probably most of us have experienced some form of it. It is hard look in one direction and not have the bike start moving in that direction. Early in my riding career I nailed several pot holes dead center because I fixated on the obstacle rather than the escape route. Train yourself to look at the solution rather than the problem. The obstacle will be screaming for your attention but you must look where you want to go to have any chance of getting there in a swerve situation. It is amazing to me how hard this is. Knowing something intellectually and being able to do what you know you should do at a time of surprise is not easy.

Swerves can take your tires to their traction limits. You and your 900 pound bike are headed in some particular direction and you want to change that direction twice (once to steer clear of the obstacle and once to get back in the pavement's direction so you don't end up in the ditch) in a short time and short distance. The tires' grip on the pavement is going to make those direction changes possible if you give the tires a fighting chance. You can't, however, ask them to slow you down while they are providing the quick direction change. So, keep off the brakes until the swerve is complete and the bike is back vertical. (This, too, is hard to do – the initial reaction to almost any surprise is to try to slow down.) You shouldn't snap off the throttle or accelerate during a swerve either. It may seem silly for me to mention accelerate – who would want to accelerate while swerving around an obstacle? – but I'm not thinking about an intentional acceleration. I'm thinking about the unintentional throttle input that could happen as the handlebars swing during a swerve if the rider has not developed this skill.

In a swerve, you want to change direction twice as quick as possible (I think I just said that!). The bike has to lean to turn and the amount of lean and delay in getting to that lean will determine how fast the bike direction changes (other factors being equal). If you let the bike lean underneath you while staying upright, your rotational inertia does not come into play and quicker leans can be achieved. So, make no attempt to lean with the bike, just let it lean under you.

At all speeds faster than a walk, you turn a motorcycle by countersteering (actually, I think you always countersteer but I'll leave that as a debate for another day). Push forward on the left handlebar and you will go left (or start going less right if you were going right). In an aggressive maneuver like a swerve, you need to aggressively push on the handlebar. No mamby pamby inputs will do if you need a non mamby pamby swerve. On the other hand, those inputs (like all motorcycle control inputs) should be smooth or you will exceed the tire traction limits. You will need three firm handlebar inputs to execute your swerve: one to turn away from the obstacle, one to stop turning away and start turning back in the original direction of travel (but shifted over), and a final one to stop turning as the original direction of travel is approached. These should come without conscious thought. If you do have to think about them during a practice session, you may be trying too hard.

Speaking of practice: Practice, Practice, Practice. I am clearly preaching to myself on this one. I understand and believe everything I've said in this article but my swerving skills remain deficient and I need more practice. My reading and writing about swerves is no substitute for on-bike practice. The same is probably true for you – for swerves, quick stops, or whatever you know you need to become more skillful at.

There are no rules in Aruba...at least that is what the tour guide kept telling us. Julie and I spent 5 wonderful days in Aruba in June and I will definitely go back. Aruba is an island 15 miles off the coast of Venezuela. The island is 20 miles long and 6 miles wide at the widest point. You would think it is all tropical, but from the pictures I sent, Aruba has a substantial desert side. We signed up for a Land Rover tour of the island, and as luck would have it, I was asked to drive and carry two other couples in my vehicle. Now, normally, that would not be a big deal, but most of the tour was in the desert on very rough terrain and up and down some pretty steep slopes. We had 3 vehicles in our group, and just like in GWRRA training, they put the least experienced guy (me) in the middle. Isn't that what group riding teaches us, to put the least experienced in the middle, and in some cases, number 2 position so they can observe the ride leader. And this is where my GWRRA training came into good use. We went through some tough terrain, tight gullies, up some very steep slopes, and I handled it all very well and the tour guides and my passengers applauded my driving. Here is the scoop, I watched every line the lead guy took, and I took the same line and came through just fine. This is what I learned following Greg Kestner all over this half of the country, I followed his line in and out of turns and came through just fine. I had the ultimate adrenaline rush, especially when we had to floor it to climb a very steep slope (Julie had the ultimate panic rush). In addition, we spent some quality time lounging on the beach and sipping beverages, and our last night there we had the most romantic sunset dinner only 10 feet from the ocean while soft music from a band played in the background.

As you might have heard, I got pretty sick for about 2 weeks, and now Julie has it, so we spent the July Fourth weekend just laying in chaise lounges in my back yard. We actually spent at least 20 hours over the 3 day holiday with our butts in those chairs. I am sorry we had to cancel our potluck, so we will reschedule soon so we can enjoy quality time with our GWRRA family

If you've never heard of it, then consider yourself lucky. I have had a few folks ask about the ICE Virus removal instructions.

The ICE Virus is a trojan that locks your computer and demands a "ransom" to unlock it. It is also called ransom ware in some industries. The design and looks of ICE virus software is exactly the same as that of a genuine anti-spyware software. But in reality ICE virus is just a waste application designed to show you fake security warnings and pop-ups. ICE virus is a very dangerous virus that can cause unrecoverable damage to your computer.

Mostly, ICE virus can generate bad scripts that hijack your computer and gather your personal information including your financial details and passwords for various accounts. When it is running, the computer will be seriously affected, starting up, internet speed as well as opening a program are much slower than before. Besides, ICE virus even has an ability to delete system files, disable anti-virus corrupts programs and capture personal information. This kind of ICE virus.. the longer it stays the more harm it may cause.

Refer to the following link for details and removal instructions.
